Cut Bank voters offered election options

CUT BANK - The Cut Bank city council has agreed to allow voters a choice on how city council members will be elected in the future.

The proposal, from the local government review commission, is to elect council members from the city at large. Under current ordinances, the four council members are elected from within four precincts in town. Voters can choose only from among candidates running in their precinct.

The proposed change will be on the November general election ballot, city officials said.
